Health Officer of New York to five years met with much opposition. It is a measure of doubtful expediency at this time, when Quarantine methods are undergoing a scrutiny that may lead to still further changes than those already made, and especially when the fitness of the present Health Officer is seriously questioned by some very capable critics.

By and by, in all probability, she will return to New York, and then there will not be enough telegraph where in the United States to dash her quaint little advertising schemes through the country.

Five years is a long term of office. It would carry a Health Officer of the Port beyond the term of a Governor by whom he may have been appointed, and of two Mayors of the city. The efficiency of the officer would not be increased by the length of its incumbent's term. Dr. Smith, whose appointment was for two years, held over for more than ten years, but no one pretended that he was any better fitted for the position at the close of his term than he had been at its commencement.
